The Spanish branch of an American company is forced to ban tobacco in its offices. Those who want to smoke during office hours will have to do it on the street. Ramírez, one of the employees, starts to collect signatures in order to use an unoccupied office as a smoking room. At the start, everyone seems to agree, but at the moment of truth they will think of all sorts of excuses to not appear on the list; on the other hand, they will have no problem signing another, that of a team who will play a football match against the employees of another office.
