Producers: Ovideo

The testimony of an exiled Guinean takes us through the recent history of Equatorial Guinea from Spanish colonization, through independence in 1969 and Francisco Macías's bloody dictatorship, without forgetting Teodoro Obiang's current petrol regime. Our leading character intersperses his own personal experiences with those of his people. From his exile, he explains how he inherited a river on the death of his father and he tells us about the legends and customs of his country.
